

HOW CAN HCR HELP YOU DO BUSINESS IN THE USA?

We've worked with clients on US-related projects for two decades and in 2016 began to formalise our US network, centring on Boston. Since then we have worked with many British companies who wanted to establish themselves in the United States or dealt with their US legal issues. How can we help you?

Which state?

1

When wondering where and how to set up a branch in the United States it helps to have a state-by-state comparison. We provide this service cost effectively, giving you a tailored chart with the pros and cons of corporate set up in three or four states, for easy comparison.

Investigations of US companies

2

When you're contemplating working with a US counterparty, whether as a distributor for your products or as a supplier, or for some other commercial purpose, it is worth carrying out an investigation into the company and its owners before signing the contract. We can help with this.

M&A work and due diligence

3

While acquisition contracts might be governed by US law, if the target is American it is still necessary to have US lawyers perform due diligence on that target. We can arrange this through our trusted network.

Review of contracts governed by US law

4

Don't let your UK lawyers ring up large bills reviewing a contract for you only to add a disclaimer saying the whole review was based on "common sense" when the contract is actually governed by the law of a US state. You need the right person in the right location, with the right knowledge to do this work for you.

Litigation

5

Even if the form contracts you use are all subject to English or US courts, you might still find yourself drawn into a dispute in the United States if sued by a third party there in tort. If that happens, it is sometimes advisable to have not only US attorneys on your side but also a public relations advisor who can help reduce the risk of more trouble. We can and do assist in this.
